Description

(After) Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec (1864-1901, France.) This hand-pulled lithograph was inspired by Toulouse-Lautrec's vintage 1896 advertising poster, "Troupe de Mlle Eglantine" (Mademoiselle Eglantine's Troupe.) The image captures the energy and frivolity of the chorus line performing the can-can. In the bottom left corner, the work has the trademark initials of Lautrec, a signature of Lautrec, and the writing "122 J.P. Remond Lith." right below the signature. [The lithograph was recreated using the same hand pulled process on a vintage press in 1999 by renowned lithographer and chromist, Jean-Pierre Remond (b.1946, France)] The unframed dimensions of the piece are approximately 31"x 24." Note: The piece is sequentially numbered (122) and the word "chromist" refers to the printing of color in lithograph. Henri Toulouse-Lautrec is best known for his portrayal of the colorful, provocative and decadent theatrical life of Paris in the late 1800s. He was a regular patron of Pari
