Description

Lens, oil on canvas, 12x12" 2018 A camera is a tool for visually recording the world, and it also acts as a framing device in real time. I experience my surroundings differently when I see them through the viewfinder of a camera, and then through the resulting image. This "split-screen" painting is about both of those experiences. The vibrant color of the flowers, and the focused gaze of the girl both existing together but individually, speaks to me of presence, memory, art, thought and time.
